

Resilience Activity Reflection:

For the resilience activity, I spoke with my close friend Alex. I chose Alex because we have a history of deep, meaningful conversations, and I trust him with sensitive topics. Sharing my thoughts and emotions with him felt secure and comfortable, which encouraged me to be more open and vulnerable than I usually am. This level of openness deepened our connection and trust, highlighting the importance of vulnerability in building strong, supportive relationships.

Through our conversation, I learned that my need for social connection is deeply tied to my sense of well-being and resilience. Alex reminded me that it's okay to lean on others during tough times, which was an eye-opener for me. I've realised that engaging in more profound conversations and expressing vulnerabilities strengthens my relationships, providing a solid support system that enhances my resilience.

To incorporate these insights into my resilience-building efforts, I plan to make it a point to initiate deeper conversations with friends and family more regularly. This will not only help me feel more connected but also build a network of mutual support for times of stress or adversity.

One significant resilience-building strategy I aim to implement this year is to establish a regular "check-in" routine with a few close friends where we share our challenges and achievements. This practice will foster a sense of community and shared resilience, reinforcing the idea that we're not alone in our struggles.

Work-Life Balance Strategy:

Regarding my work-life balance, I've set a goal to work no more than 40 hours per week. This allocation allows for a healthy balance between my professional responsibilities and personal life, ensuring that one does not overwhelm the other.

Working Time: I plan to work from 9 AM to 5 PM, Monday through Friday, with strict boundaries to avoid work bleeding into my personal time.

Personal Time: Evenings and weekends will be reserved exclusively for personal activities, relaxation, and spending time with loved ones.

To create and maintain these boundaries, I will:

Turn off work-related notifications on my phone and computer outside of working hours.

Communicate my availability to colleagues and clients, making it clear when I am and am not available.

Use separate devices or user profiles for work and personal activities, if possible, to further delineate between the two.

For fun activities during my personal time, I plan to:

Engage in outdoor activities like hiking and cycling to connect with nature and exercise.

Dedicate time to hobbies that I enjoy but have neglected, such as painting and reading.

Schedule regular social outings with friends and family to strengthen my relationships and unwind.

Implementing this strategy will help me achieve a more fulfilling and balanced life, where work does not overshadow my personal growth, health, and happiness.
